“ It's funny, I was just thinking about him the other day. (Well, every time I screw up with the potential for a bigger screw up that I somehow avoid, really.) Just after Dad died, Mr. Cranston and I were in the red pickup taking the riding lawn mower into town for repair. On the way back home after we had picked it up, I had left the sales receipt and repair invoice on the seat of the lawn mower in back. Of course, it flew out in the middle of an intersection in downtown Batavia, but I didn't notice until we got all the way out to the RR house. We turned around and went back into town and found it still lying in the middle of the intersection. He turned me and said: "Son, you've got more luck than skill!" Every time I mess up, I always remember that moment! LOL - Hans Southwell
